NFL'S $1B CONCUSSION SETTLEMENT UPHOLD BY U.S. APPEALS COURT

IA federal appeals court on Monday upheld the National Football League's estimated $1 billion concussion settlement with retired players, calling the agreement imperfect but fair. A small group of players had objected to the deal, which was approved in April 2015 by U.S. District Judge Anita Brody in Philadelphia, because it did not cover potential victims of a degenerative brain disease that scientists have linked to repeated blows to the head. The settlement calls for payments of up to $5 million each to former players diagnosed with certain neurological disorders, but it does not address chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE), which some researchers say can be caused by concussions. REUTERS

SYRIAN OPPOSITION ASKS UN TO HALT PEACE TALKS

2The mainstream Syrian opposition asked the United Nations to halt peace talks and rebels launched a new offensive against government forces, accusing the world body of bias in favor of President Bashar al-Assad. The opposition's coordinator at the Geneva talks, Riad Hijab, said earlier it was unacceptable for talks to go on if the government and its allies pushed on with sieges and bombing civilian areas, echoing criticism of government offensives elsewhere. Only three delegates met U.N. envoy Staffan de Mistura for talks on Monday, instead of the usual 15, after a letter signed by unspecified "armed revolutionary factions" said de Mistura and the government were trying to put forward "half-solutions." REUTERS

AMAZON OFFERS VIDEO STREAMING SERVICE AS MONTHLY SUBSCRIPTION

3Amazon said it would offer its video streaming service as a monthly subscription as it looks to drive membership in its Prime bundle. Amazon Prime Video, which is the first service to be separated from the Prime service, will cost $8.99 per month, according to the company's website. At the same time, Amazon will offer its Prime subscription on a monthly basis for $10.99 per month. Current members of the Prime service, which includes access to music and faster delivery options, pay $99 per year. Netflix, which offers a similar video subscription service, could be hurt by the move, analysts said. "Amazon certainly has the brand name, the customer relationships, and the focus on high-quality consumer experiences to impact the growth in Netflix's U.S. subscriber base," RBC Capital Markets analysts said in a note. REUTERS

Strength, tradition and Mark Wahlberg sightings at marathon

Cheers, Marathon
Monday.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroSpencer
spencer.buell@metro.us

A mild Monday greeted runners in the 2016 Boston Marathon, as thousands hit the streets in the 120th installment of the race.

The occasion once again brought out the race-day rituals that make it a highlight of Bostonians' calendars and the unofficial start to spring: from the scream tunnel kisses and high fives to the surreptitious drinking and cheeky signs about joggers moving faster than the T.

Three years after the attacks that disrupted that tradition and wounded so many, the "Boston Strong" slogan appears to still have staying power. There it was, on countless T-shirts and signs again this year. A massive blue-and-yellow "Boston Strong" banner flapped in the wind at the Boston Harbor Hotel. Another one in paint greeted marathoners on a Commonwealth Avenue overpass.

Crews from "Patriots Day," the Mark Wahlberg movie depicting the events surrounding the bombings, were filming along the race route this year. Spectators spotted Wahlberg himself on race day surveying the crowds in his character's Boston cop outfit.

As promised, security was tight, and many fans found themselves waiting in long lines to get through checkpoints on sidewalks.

Many of the runners this year were survivors of the bombings. In one photo that made the rounds on Twitter Monday, survivor Patrick Downes at race's end embraced Bill Richard, whose son Martin died three years ago.

Other photos captured quintessential marathon moments, like when two runners draped the arms of a fellow marathoner over their shoulders and carried him past the Boylston Street grandstands.

By late afternoon, the last of roughly 30,000 runners were crossing the big blue line, draping themselves in space blankets and taking time to wind down. At least until training starts for Marathon 121.

Fisher is the 2016 recipient of recognition from the Humanist Hub.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroSpencer

Actress Carrie Fisher was in Cambridge on Monday to accept a lifetime achievement award at Harvard.

Fisher is the 2016 recipient of recognition from the Humanist Hub in partnership with the Harvard College Community of Humanists, Atheists and Agnostics.

"This award, created in 2007, honors an individual whose life and contributions to popular culture and society exemplify the values of Humanism: compassion, creativity and honesty, among others," reads a description of the event.

The group wrote online that the award celebrates Fisher's writing and her efforts to raise awareness about mental illness and addiction.

The actress, well known as Princess Leia in the "Star Wars" movies, has starred in an autobiographical one-woman play called "Wishful Drinking" and penned a memoir by the same name.

She's spoken out frequently and candidly about her bipolar disorder, taking part in countless Q&A's and on-air interviews.

"I have a chemical imbalance that, in its most extreme state, will lead me to a mental hospital," Fisher once said in an interview with Diane Sawyer. "I am mentally ill. I can say that. I am not ashamed of that. I survived that, I'm still surviving it, but bring it on."

In a roundup of Fisher's public pronouncements, The Huffington Post, dubbed her "an O.G. mental health hero."

"Her forthright activism and outspokenness about addiction, mental illness and agnosticism have advanced public discourse on these issues with creativity and empathy," Humanist Hub wrote on its website.

The list of celebrities honored with the group's Outstanding Lifetime Achievement Award in Cultural Humanism include Salman Rushdie, Stephen Fry and Seth MacFarlane.

Supreme Court appears split over Obama's immigration plan

The Supreme Court appeared closely divided on Monday as it weighed whether to revive President Barack Obama's plan to spare from deportation roughly 4 million immigrants in the country illegally, raising the possibility of a 4-4 deadlock that would block the program.

Based on questions asked during the 90-minute oral argument in a case that tests the limits of presidential powers, the court's four liberal justices seemed poised to back Obama while the four conservatives were more skeptical.

If the court is to avoid a 4-4 split, Chief Justice John Roberts could be the most likely member of the conservative bloc to join the liberals in voting to reinstate the program. One possible compromise outcome would be that the court could uphold Obama's plan while leaving some legal questions unresolved, including whether the government can provide work permits to eligible applicants.

THE COURT IS EVENLY
IDEOLOGICALLY
FEBRUARY DEATH OF
ANTONIN SCALIA.

The court is evenly divided ideologically following the February death of conservative Antonin Scalia. A 4-4 split would leave in place a 2015 lower-court ruling that threw out the president's executive action, which bypassed the Republican-led Congress.

The case, one of the biggest of the court's current term ending in June, pits Obama against 26 states led by Texas that filed suit to block his immigration plan.

If the court does muster a majority to decide the case, it appeared the justices would resolve the merits of the legal claim instead of deciding it on the narrow procedural question of whether the states had legitimate grounds to sue. Texas said it had "standing" to sue because it would be hurt by the additional costs it would incur by providing driver's licenses to those who obtain legal status.

Roberts asked tough questions of the Obama administration on that point, but seemed less aggressive on whether the government had the authority to implement the program.

Conservative Justice Anthony Kennedy, who frequently casts the deciding vote in close cases, expressed concern that the administration had exceeded its authority by having the executive branch set immigration policy rather than carry out laws passed by Congress. REUTERS

BRIEF

Clinton says she would 'go further' than Obama on immigration if elected Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton said if she wins the White House she would go farther than President Barack Obama's executive action on immigration and would propose comprehensive immigration reform legislation within 100 days of taking office.

"I will do everything I can to protect the president's executive actions and go further to bring more people relief and keep families together," Clinton said in a statement.

Obama, who has seen many of his major legislative initiatives stifled by Republican lawmakers, has drawn Republican ire with his use of executive action to get around Congress on immigration policy and other matters including gun control and health care.

Ecuador quake survivors relate harrowing tales, mourn the dead

The nation's worst quake in a decade killed more than 413 people, injured another 2,000, flattened buildings and tore apart roads along the Pacific coast.

During a terrifying five hours trapped in the rubble of her own restaurant, Filerma Rayo almost lost hope.

"I was yelling and yelling and then, at the end, I started to think I would die there," said Rayo, 33, as she nursed a crushed foot, pinned by a falling piece of cement when a 7.8-magnitude earthquake shook Ecuador on Saturday.

"It was my siblings who saved us, the rescue teams hadn't arrived yet," said Rayo, who runs a restaurant on the bottom floor of a now-shattered hotel in the worst-hit town of Pedernales, a rustic beach location on the Pacific coast.

Her three brothers and sisters, also from Pedernales, came looking for Rayo and her husband, who suffered head injuries, after the quake. Guided by her shouts, they managed to remove the rubble and pull her out around midnight, well before emergency crews arrived.

Nearly 100 neighbors in Pedernales were not so lucky.

They died when the earthquake struck, sending pastel-top floors crashing to the ground, punching holes in the facade of the church on the main square and obliterating a local hotel, its roof jackknifed and crumbling.

More than 600 people were treated for injuries at tents in the town's still-intact football stadium or were transported by ambulance or helicopter to regional hospitals.

Most of the corpses recovered were taken to the stadium and laid out under tents. Only four of 91 had not been identified by families. Wakes and burials were being quickly arranged.

Queues for supplies such as bottled water, blankets and food snaked along the stadium walls, as government and Red Cross workers rushed with aid supplies to the lush, hilly zone next to Pacific beaches.

Residents complained that a lack of electricity was keeping them from using mobile phones to contact loved ones.

Many lost all their possessions.

"There's nothing left of the houses and nowhere safe to stay," said housewife Betty Reyna, 44, who was keeping watch over a dozen members of her family as they slept under a gas station awning early on Monday.

Reyna, her daughter and son had travelled from the capital Quito in search of relatives when they heard about the destruction in her hometown.

They were able to find some family members but Reyna had still not seen her parents or other daughter, though she had made contact with them and knew they were largely unharmed. Her father, however, had suffered head injuries. REUTERS

Jerusalem bus blast wounds 16

Israeli security forces stand guard as firemen extinguish a burning bus following an explosion in Jerusalem. GETTY IMAGES

An explosion tore through a bus in Jerusalem on Monday and set a second bus on fire, wounding 16 people in what an Israeli official said was a bombing.

Israeli media said a man who was seriously injured and not carrying any identification papers was under investigation on suspicion he was responsible.

Suicide bombings on Israeli buses were a hallmark of the Palestinian revolt of 2000-2005 but have been rare since. A bomb left by an Israeli Arab aboard a Tel Aviv bus during the 2012 Gaza war caused injuries but no deaths.

Police initially said they were looking at the possibility that a technical malfunction caused the fire in Derech Hebron, an area in southwest Jerusalem close to the boundary with the Israeli-occupied West Bank. But a spokeswoman for Nir Barkat, the Israeli mayor in Jerusalem, said the explosion was a detonation.

"It was small, but it was definitely a bomb," the spokeswoman, Brachie Sprung, told Reuters.

Chrissy Teigen, John Legend welcome first daughter

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Chrissy Teigen and John Legend welcomed that daughter they've been on about, keeping everyone up to date throughout the course of Teigen's pregnancy. Little girl Luna Simone Stephens was born Thursday, coming in at 6 pounds, 11 ounces, according to an Instagram update from the couple Sunday. "She's here! Luna Simone Stephens, we are so in love with you! And sleepy. Very sleepy," Teigen said in a caption. During the course of the pregnancy, Teigen had caught flak for their decision about the baby's gender early on, a position she steadfastly defended. "I also picked the embryo with a taste for bacon, a knack for magic and size 7 feet so she can always find shoes," she joked.

Leo and Rihanna, at it again with the partying

This weekend Rihanna and Leonardo DiCaprio hit up the same after-party — Coachella's epic Neon Carnival — and were spotted hanging out, standing close, whispering in each other's ears. You know, the usual. And according to the rules of the Celebrity Gossip Industrial Complex, any time Rihanna and DiCaprio go to a party together, we are required to comment on it — even if it only happens every year or so. There are even photos of them together this time, which led to the awkward discovery that they both wear sunglasses at night, inside a massive party. That's not quite awesome. Oh, and DiCaprio's festival attire looks more like what he'd wear to Burning Man, but whatever. A desert shindig is a desert shindig.

No jail time for Amber Heard in Aussie doggy case

Amber Heard is off the hook — sort of. The actress pleaded guilty to providing a false immigration document in her high-profile legal battle over her and husband Johnny Depp bringing their prize terriers into the country without permission while Depp was making more "Pirates of the Caribbean" movie magic. While Australian officials had initially talked a big game about throwing the book at Heard over the matter, the prosecutors eventually decided to drop the more serious, jail-threatening charges of illegally importing the animals.

All Heard has to do now to be in the clear is pay a fine — of $1,000 Australian — and not commit any offense in Australia over the next month. Seems reasonable enough. Oh, and she and Depp did also have to record a terrifying, hostage-style apology video extolling the virtues of Australia's ecosystem. At least I think they had to do it, since it certainly doesn't look in any way voluntary.

Don Cheadle does right by Miles

With "Miles Ahead," the actor didn't want to give the jazz legend a boring biopic.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

First off: No, Don Cheadle doesn't have a favorite Miles Davis record.

"It depends on the mood," the actor admits. "There's so many in there. It's like different foods. They each have a different palate that satisfies."

Cheadle, 51, did know which part of the jazz legend's life he wanted to film, and it may be surprising, especially considering his film — "Miles Ahead," which the Oscar-nominated actor stars in, co-wrote and directed — is the first big movie about Davis' life. Cheadle picked the late '70s, specifically a few days during the five years he had quit music completely, holing up in his New York apartment, growing out his hair and acting even more erratically than usual.

Normally artists — especially troubled geniuses like Davis — get sprawling, career-spanning movies. Cheadle knew he didn't want that.

"He was relevant in music for 40-plus years. Each moment would have been given such short shrift," Cheadle explains. Over the years Cheadle had been

Don Cheadle dons a shaggy wig and a red horn to play Miles Davis in "Miles Ahead," which he also co-wrote and directed. SONY PICTURES CLASSICS pitched movies about Davis' life. "They felt like Cliffs Notes of his life."

Besides, Davis probably would have hated a standard, sleepy biopic. "I think he actually went on record about some movie he had seen done that way," Cheadle says. "He said, 'Eh, I hate that s—. Don't do that with me.'"

But "Miles Ahead" is also a wild, often free-form movie that's more speculative fiction than Wikipedia movie. Cheadle's Davis winds up joining forces with a dodgy Rolling Stone journalist (Ewan McGregor) to steal back some tapes featuring his first recorded music in years, from a shady record label. Along the way, Davis periodically flashes back to the 1950s and '60s before snapping back to the present.

"I wanted it to feel like we're walking through a Miles Davis experience rather than be something that was informational," Cheadle says. He recalls visiting a Davis museum exhibit a few years back. "For the five-year period [of no work], you walked into this dark space where the walls come in and it's very strange and tactile. You feel like you're inside Miles' brain. I wanted that feeling for the movie."

GETTY IMAGES

Avoiding being "Kind of Blue"

"Miles Ahead" leaves a lot of even basic info out of the movie, and even interrupts big hits — like "So What," off of his best known record, "Kind of Blue" — with deep cuts. Cheadle found he didn't always have access to some of his subject's biggest hits.

"You'd come across a track and say, 'I want to use that one.' They'd say, 'That's not actually written by Miles,'" Cheadle says, laughing, about how Davis would erroneously claim credits from collaborators, like Wayne Shorter. "Miles would change three or four notes in a tune then say it was his song. He was like, 'Hey, I gave you the room to do that, so my name's on it.'"

Cheadle found that sometimes a more obscure song would be just as cinematic. He also didn't stick to playing songs over the appropriate periods. "If I want to play something from '87 in 1958, I want to be able to do that," he says.

"MAJOR LEAGUE"

It was 1989, all right: Corbin Bernsen, Charlie Sheen and Tom Berenger were top-billed (and over Wesley Snipes) in the baseball comedy "Major League." PARAMOUNT PICTURES

We're at the point where even the fun-filled films of 25 years ago can look questionable. Sure enough, David S. Ward's classic baseball romp is filled with the kind of casual misogyny and racism that was de rigueur in the cinema of 1989. But just as we're not going to throw Buster Keaton's "Seven Chances" under the bus just because of some of its full-on racist gags, we can find a balance between recognizing this one's backwardness without condemning it. Not that "Major League" is in the same universe as Buster Keaton, though its slovenly good vibes and underdog premise — the loser lineup of the Cleveland Indians fight to prove they're secret all-stars — is high irresistible. And can we get a Tom Berenger-ssance?

"STAR TREK II: THE WRATH OF KHAN"

"Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan" is way better than the second rebooted film, "Star Trek Into Darkness." PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Do nerds even like the new "Star Trek" movies? J.J. Abrams gave "Star Wars" heads exactly what they wanted with "The Force Awakens" — that is, a carbon copy of the first "Star Wars." But when he rebooted Captain Kirk et al., he dumbed it down so much for the masses that it might as well be any rando space opera. At least in 1982 even plebes flocked to the only sort-of-brain-drained movies with the OG crew, including the best one, which exhumed a fan favorite baddie — Ricardo Montalban's superduper, megahammy Khan — for a romp that's equal parts thrilling and brainy.

"BREATHE"

There aren't enough films about female friendships, and even fewer about when they go south. The feature debut of actor Melanie Laurent is about both. Using increasingly tense long takes, Laurent crams us in the head of a mousy high schooler (Josephine Japy) who finds herself an improbable bestie in the cool new girl in town (Lou de Laage). Then, just like that, one chills on the other, leading to heartbreak and worse. It's a platonic breakup movie with the sexual tension left in, and Laurent's handiwork is so deft you might forgive or even defend its problematic-ish ending.

Chicago have been making music for almost 50 years. GETTY IMAGES

Chicago joins the Hall of Fame

The new inductees are "sprinting uphill."

DAVID CHIU
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

When it came to receiving perhaps the biggest honor in rock, Chicago are proof that it's better late than never.

Until late last year, the popular horn-driven group had never been nominated for the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, even after a long history of successful albums and hit songs. That oversight was remedied when Chicago were finally inducted April 8.

"It's an honor," says Chicago co-founder/trumpeter Lee Loughnane. "I didn't realize how exciting it would actually be [until] it happened."

The original members of Chicago were honored at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame ceremony earlier this month in Brooklyn, including founding guitarist-singer Terry Kath, who died at the age of 31 in 1978.

"Through the years, his guitar playing has been overlooked," says Loughnane of his former bandmate, "Probably because [he was] in such a large band, but if Terry had been in a trio, he probably would have been right up there with Jimi Hendrix, who idolized Terry. It's great for Terry to be involved in this honor as well as us. He has still been with us in spirit all these years."

Despite facing snubs while Chicago racked up an impressive string of hits during the '70s and '80s like "Saturday in the Park" and "You're the Inspiration," Loughnane and the band stayed humble and grateful.

"I think we had pretty much resigned ourselves. We were lucky enough to keep working," Lough-nane explains. "I think [this honor is] going to give a boost to our career in our 49th year of being together. Rather than trotting into the 50th year of our existence as a band, we'll be sprinting uphill."

Chicago has survived different lineups and changing musical trends, with original members Loughnane, Robert Lamm, Walt Parazaider and James Pankow still leading the way. He notes, "The music has resonated with [so many different generations] in the way that the previous generation had."

When it comes to touring, Chicago are a nonstop machine, on the road pretty much annually. "We've enjoyed doing it," Loughnane adds. "I've never done anything else with my life, so this band is it. Three things that have never failed me are music, my trumpet and the guys in this band."

Waitlist woes: What to do when your dream school defers you

This stage is a special sort of purgatory.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizabeth.salarior@metro.us

After a grueling college application process, being waitlisted can feel like a lethal sort of limbo. After all, no one wants to be their dream school's sloppy seconds.

But being waitlisted isn't the end of the world — or, less dramatically, your college prospects. Jay Bacrania, the CEO and founder of college prep company Signet Education, gave us pointers on what to do.

Know the reasoning behind the waitlist

The common understanding of the waitlist is that it's for applicants who were close to acceptance, but didn't quite make the cut. That's certainly one factor, says Bacrania, but also consider that "a waitlist can be a yield management tool. [Colleges] can put a bunch of people on the list, then accept those who show further interest." That's because colleges are really focused on managing their yields, or the number of people who accept their acceptances, Bacrania explains.

Other reasons? A college might think it's your safety school, or want to give you a "soft letdown," which is basically the college saying, "We liked you, but we can't admit you."

Reach out — but be humble and sincere

You — not your parents, and generally not your college counselor — should reach out to the school directly to affirm your interest. However, proceed with caution.

"Any time you're communicating with a college admissions office, you have to keep in mind that whatever you do, everybody's doing that, and then think about the poor person on the other end who has to deal with it," says Bacrania. "You have to use a light touch."

Be succinct

You certainly want to update colleges on any compelling information, like stellar second semester grades or a new activity. But whatever you say should be limited to a page.

Bacrania suggests writing a letter to the admissions officer in charge of your geographic territory, and reiterating why you want to attend and are a good fit. "You want to do it only for your top school, because you want to be as honest as possible, and you're basically committed if offered a chance to attend," he explains.

Getting waitlisted is not the end of the world. ISTOCK

Timing is everything

Emailing or calling an admissions office the day after you get the waitlist letter is a definite no-no. Avoid their busiest times, and it's not a bad idea to wait until late April or early May. Patience, grasshopper.

Getting off the waitlist = hitting the jackpot

The problem with offering blanket advice about navigating the waitlist is this: "There's a really small chance that students get off the list. It's [always] different, and it's different at every school and every year. ... I would say the most prudent strategy is to move on the moment you put that letter in the mail," says Bacrania. "What we would recommend is treat it like playing the lottery."

If you're thinking you need to do more, just don't

As much as you want to ensure that the odds are forever in your favor, less is more. Bacrania advises against sending extra materials, or cutesy gifts like cookies — they won't increase your chances of getting in, and at worst, brown-nosing stunts may rub admissions counselors the wrong way.

Meanwhile, get excited about your other options

College applicants who've set their sights on their dream school often suffer from I-only-have-eyes-for-you syndrome. Other options — good options — do exist. Evaluate them in terms of various factors, not just prestige.

"You might apply to one school for a particular academic program or a social element or a location. You can make that list varied," says Bacrania. "Think carefully about that college list. That's where you can have an impact on the whole process."

MOUNT IDA COLLEGE

Open the Door to Your Success

"Graduate education is a necessity to succeed in today's job market," said Sharon McKechnie, Dean of Graduate Studies at Mount Ida College. "Mount Ida College is a century-old institution at the forefront of career-based education, providing each student with the tools needed to achieve lifetime goals after graduation."

Dean McKechnie oversees Mount Ida's master's degree programs in management, healthcare management, human resource management, leadership in sport, and interior architecture.

When asked why students choose to study at Mount Ida, she attributed it to the college's small class sizes, coupled with a strong sense of community, individualized attention, and flexibility. "Our graduate programs are designed for busy working adults. This is why we offer a hybrid model, where students take courses on our beautiful Newton campus and online."

Dean McKechnie also emphasized the importance of learning from industry experts. "It's not enough to just learn theory. Our students learn from professors with hands-on experience. Take Phyllis Baron, for example. She was a Senior Vice President at Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts for 13 years."

At Mount Ida, she adds, "we are dedicated to providing the best possible education for career success."

As opioid epidemic grows in Massachusetts, innovative Cambridge College program focuses on preparing teachers to help find school-based solutions

The statistics are sobering. According to the latest figures from Massachusetts Department of Health and Human Services, the number of opioid overdose deaths in 2014 rose to 1,173 – the highest they have been since 2000.

And the crisis does not show any signs of abating. Indeed, if it follows trends predicted by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, the numbers will only continue to grow. Opioids, which include heroin as well as prescription drugs such as oxycodone, are known to be highly addictive and very difficult to quit.

Cambridge College School of Education is poised to respond and play a key role in helping prevent opioid addiction by offering initial and professional licensure programs to train teachers in providing skills-based health education in PreK-Grade 12 school systems.

"The road to addiction is a very gradual progression that often starts very early," says Mary Connolly, C.A.G.S., Chair of Cambridge College School of Education's Health and Family & Consumer Education Program. "For most, it starts when they are young, so our prevention should begin early in schools to be most effective.

For that reason, it is so important to make sure health education teachers are able to get the skills-based education they need to help prevent this epidemic at the PreK-12 levels.

"What Cambridge College School of Education is offering is really unique in terms of training health education teachers and ensuring they have the knowledge and the tools to teach school-age students how to reduce risky behavior, improve personal health, and increase academic performance learning skills and tools – rather than just hearing information about drugs. Also, the teachers we train become leaders in the fight against substance abuse in their own school systems."

This innovative program is just one of the programs offered by Cambridge College School of Education. The school has a proven track record of success with over more than 20,000 alumni working in the field of education. Learn more about the exciting opportunities in education by attending the Cambridge College School of Education's upcoming Information Session on May 19th at 6pm in Cambridge. Kate Moss swears by this beautiful body book

"Nourish" will make over your body from the inside, out.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

It's easy to get wrapped up in one aspect of living a healthy lifestyle, like making it to the gym three times a week, or cutting out carbs. But personal trainer Holly Davidson says truly living a balanced lifestyle goes deeper than that: "It's not just about food. It's not just about exercise. It's very much about your mind, body and soul."

Davidson teamed up with her friends Amber Rose (a private chef) and actress Sadie Frost to write a book that encompasses exactly that. "Nourish" is a handbook — possibly the prettiest one ever — that gives women tips on eating well and exercising, but also having a healthy mindset and feeding their soul in other ways, such as all-natural beauty treatments, meditating and practicing making yourself a priority.

"Nourish" authors Amber Rose, Holly Davidson and Sadie Frost. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Fitness

Davidson tells us everything stems from the mind, including her area of expertise: fitness. "You could [look at] the fittest person in the gym and that person might very well have thought, 'I didn't want to go today. I have period pain. My gym bag isn't packed. Just forget it.'" Everyone has emotional blocks to overcome, which the book dives deep into how to overcome.

"Nourish" gives step-by-step fitness moves that can be done at home with very little equipment and personal goals to set while explaining how the results spill over into other areas of your life, like your sex life or stress level.

Food

Real women have families, invite friends over for dinner, crave pancakes on Sunday mornings and occasionally want a piece of cake. The recipes in "Nourish" reflect that. There are recipes for all the "healthy" foods you might expect such as smoothies and buckwheat oatmeal, but it also has recipes for coconut and banana pancakes, Japanese chicken and blackberry and rose cheesecake.

"What we eat greatly determines how we feel," Amber Rose writes in "Nourish." The recipes she uses are made with nutrient-dense foods, healthy fats and, of course, lots of fruits and veggies. "The idea that we can adapt what and how we eat to alter how we feel within ourselves is empowering," Rose writes in the book.

Soul

For her part, Sadie Frost is open about her past struggles with anxiety and depression and reveals what worked for her. Learning various breathing techniques and meditating transformed her. Frost shares how to do it, partially by including yoga for different moods, such as depression or anger.

CARE Laser is making history with their #bantherazor campaign. Why every Bostonian should join the movement too!

In the history of humankind, there have been seldom few causes that cut across all genders, occupations, sports fans, hair colors, and body types. That is why what the CARE Laser team has set out to do is so unbelievable. A leader in laser hair removal for more than 25 years, this company has come to the US on a sensational mission: to establish their beauty centers across the Commonwealth and unite all Bostonians against one common enemy — painful hair removal treatments.

The impetus for this revolution is people like you, your friends and family who CARE Laser believes have suffered long enough. They are calling for an end to wasted time, energy and money spent shaving and waxing unwanted hair from your face, arms, legs, bikini, chest, back, and everywhere else it continues to stubbornly grow back.

Brian, a restaurant manager in Southie, was one of the first #bantherazor supporters. "I used to come to work looking like I'd been in a wicked fight and got the worst of it. My face and neck were nicked up, red with razor burn, and sometimes I even had breakouts from ingrown hairs," says Brian. "Laser hair removal was a lifesaver, I tell ya. My face, neck, even my ears are smooth, pimple-free, and, man do I look and feel awesome!"

Thousands of people, just like Brian, have already joined CARE Laser around the Commonwealth in tossing their razors and swearing off waxing forever. You too can become part of this growing rebellion against painful hair removal treatments by signing the CARE Laser petition at www.bantherazor.com.

Before you boo-hoo another petition, CARE Laser truly is making this one different from any other petition you may have signed in the past. Once you have declared your support and committed to throwing away your razor, CARE Laser will give you a free laser hair removal treatment PLUS enter you to win one of four incredible grand prizes:

- 2 tickets to Beyoncé at Gillette Stadium on June 3rd
- $1,000 Off a laser hair removal treatment package
- $250 AMEX Gift Card (2 winners)
- 1 pair of Red Sox Tickets

CARE Laser is giving you permission to toss your razors, shaving creams, and containers of wax, depilatory cream, and bleach forever!

"It feels amazing to be so unburdened and free," says Audrey, a mom and financial planner from Charlestown. "I joined the CARE Laser movement just 3 months ago, and the biggest surprise has been having so much more time for me and the things I like to do...alone. I'm watching episodes of Real Housewives on my tablet or painting my toenails when my husband and kids think I'm in the shower shaving. OMG, hopefully they don't read this!"

Like Audrey, hundreds of Bostonians have already put their trust in CARE, joined the movement, and now have the smooth, silky skin they have always desired. What are you waiting for men and women of Boston? You too have a right to a #HAIRFREE, hassle-free life.

This is no fly by night movement; instead CARE Laser is hoping to change lives one hair at a time and vows to leave no Bostonian behind. This company is here for the long-term, with beauty centers already established and busting in Downtown Crossing, Newton, North And over, and Worcester. But they need your commitment to continue the momentum and us her in a new era in hair removal, so join the #BANTHERAZOR revolution today!

Ethiopian runners sweep 2016 Marathon

Boston saw two new winners this year.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matt.burke@metro.us

For years, predicting the winners of the Boston Marathon was simply a matter of selecting the correct Kenyan runner. Times have changed, and Monday it was the country of Ethiopia that stood tall.

Lemi Berhanu Hayle captured the 2016 men's title with a time of two hours, 12 minutes and 45 seconds, while Atsede Baysa won the women's race with a time of 2:29:19.

"I am very happy," Baysa told WBZ through a translator. "To win Boston is not easy. Even the name is very big."

Defending men's champ Lelisa Desisa, also from Ethiopia, could not keep pace with Hayle late in the race and finished second (47 seconds behind Hayle). Yemane Adhane Tsegay finished third, making it an all-Ethiopian top three in the men's field. The next four men to finish were Kenyan and the first American to finish was Texas' Zachary Hine, who finished 10th (2:21:37). Hine is originally from South Hadley, Massachusetts.

Baysa came from behind to edge fellow Ethiopian Tirfi Tsegaye by 44 seconds. Joyce Chepkirui, of Kenya, placed third in the women's race. Colorado's Neely Spence Gracey (2:35:00, ninth) and North Carolina's Sarah Crouch (2:37:36, 11th) were the first female Americans to cross the finish line.

Tatyana McFadden, from Maryland, won her fourth straight Boston women's wheelchair race.

Switzerland's Marcel Hug won the men's wheelchair.

Red Sox stumble in Marathon Monday game

In the traditional Patriots' Day Red Sox game, which begins each year at 11:05 a.m., the home team was the squad that looked like it could use some coffee. Boston's bullpen was brutal, allowing four runs in the eighth inning, as the Blue Jays won, 4-3. The Sox split their four-game series with the Jays, 2-2. The Sox host the Rays tonight at Fenway (7, NESN).

Atsede Baysa and Lemi Berhanu Hayle celebrate their big wins Monday in downtown Boston at the finish line. GETTY IMAGES

Celtics' depth finally comes in handy

The C's should be able to fill the hole left by Avery Bradley.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Celtics' depth has often been viewed as a hindrance instead of a positive as the history of the NBA suggests that having a regular rotation and a short bench is one of the major keys to success in the playoffs. Even in the regular season, this Celtics team didn't begin clicking until Brad Stevens found a regular eight or nine players to go to battle with. In the C's best win of the season – at Golden State – Stevens used just four bench players and played his starters a total of 158 minutes. In the C's worst game of the season – a home loss to the lowly Lakers in December – Stevens used six players off the bench and played his starters a total of 148 minutes.

Stevens will be forced to reach into his vault of quality guards Tuesday in Game 2 of the Celtics' best-of-seven series against Atlanta (7 p.m., TNT, CSNNE) as Avery Bradley is not expected to be back anytime soon thanks to the hamstring injury he suffered in Game 1. Evan Turner played 34 minutes off the bench in Game 1 and Marcus Smart played 29 minutes off the pine. Those totals were by design as the Celtics like to go small most of the time. The starting backcourt of Bradley and Isaiah Thomas played 33 and 37 minutes, respectively, in the narrow Game 1 loss. Two-guard R.J. Hunter also made a brief appearance in Game 1 and the Boston Globe reported Monday that Stevens told rookie guard Terry Rozier to "be ready" for Game 2.

"I think the one thing about having a guy like Avery out is you've got guys like Marcus Smart and Evan Turner who have played a starter's role for us all year off the bench," Stevens said. "Both of those guys are going to be critically important to replacing Avery or adding to what they normally do."

The Hawks also implement a heavy workload for their guards as Jeff Teague and Kyle Korver each played over 32 minutes. Dennis Schroder and Tim Hardaway Jr. played a combined 19 minutes off the Hawks' bench.

Aries Put your money to good use. Invest in your skills and whatever will help you raise your standard of living. The benefits that follow will prompt new beginnings.

Taurus Concentrate on keeping up with fast-changing technology and knowledge. The better equipped you are to take on new projects, the more opportunities you will encounter.

Gemini Socialize, network and do your best to make a difference. Your work will put you in the limelight, so be sure to follow through with any promises you make.

Cancer Your astute and precise way of dealing with domestic and work-related situations will give you the edge if someone challenges your decision. Your instincts will not let you down.

Leo The less you complain, the easier it will be to finish what's expected of you. Then you can move on to activities that promise adventure and excitement with a clear conscience.

Virgo Sharing ideas will prompt a couple of crucial changes in a project that you are involved with. Don't take a backseat to someone who is all talk and no action.

Libra Impulsiveness will be your downfall. Don't give in to emotional whims or spend money you don't have. Discipline, fitness and a proper diet should be your goals.

Scorpio A lifestyle change will go part and parcel with a developing partnership. If you share your thoughts, you'll come up with a plan that will benefit everyone involved.

Sagittarius Sharing something special with friends, children or loved ones is favored. Don't venture too far from home. Delays while traveling are prevalent.

Capricorn If you are asked to deal with other people's affairs, take precautions. Your time will be better spent fixing up your personal space and making changes in financial security.

Aquarius You need to get back to basics and consider taking part in some of the activities you used to enjoy. A new look will result in a pumped up attitude.

Pisces Listen to people who have experience in a field that interests you. Gathering as much information as possible will help you find what works best for you. EUGENIA LAST
